1966 FORD where quiet says quality...and "Powered by Ford" says performance

The 1966 Ford is a world of quiet quality — its appointments are lovely, its motion is untroubled and its ride every silently does a day's ride in its class over hills. It has the smoothest body Ford has ever built. A new special frame "tuned out" vibrations. The 1966 Ford is already steady, solid — that's why it's so quiet. Indeed, it may be the quietest car in the world.

The new 1966 Ford fulfills the shoddy performance that has made Ford's reputation in the market. It has the most modern car in the industry. The 1966 Ford is 156 hp. Big Six — a very lively, economical performer. And there's a choice of 5 great V-8's including the new 390 cu. in. 325 hp V-8.

What else is new and beautiful in Ford this year? A new Stereo Tape System that plays up to 50 minutes of uninterrupted music. An exclusive new stereo feature in the Mustang Coupe — swing down the top and the stereo comes right up to you like a stereo for people. New quarter and convenience features like the Shaker-16 Vibrations System on future models. New safety package. Courtesy lights throughout the car — on the inside, on the outside, in the glove box, under the instrument panel.

A new high performance line — the Deluge 300 7 Liter Mustang and Capri with 300 cu. in. V-8 and new front power disc brakes to give you improved braking. New high capacity Cruise-O-Matic transmission. New automatic speed control to make long trips easier for you.

In the 1966 Ford really the world's quietest car? Take a test-drive now at your Ford Dealer. Turn off the Stereo Tape System and listen — to the sound of quality.

To mark the birthday we blow a few notes on the editorial trumpet.

Michael's stressed when it is by being at all times, simply involved.

To tell the Canadian story we have drawn on historians, writers, politicians, diplomats, poets, actors, painters, scientists, musicians, teachers like his could go on and on! And, as a warning, many of the oldest journals in the land. Nearly every famous Canadian author in this century has appeared, not once but many times, in Maclean's. Hundreds of new writers have been first introduced to the public in these pages.

Canada is not dull but it is a hard country to grove. The biggest problem, as all Canadians know, is how to find unity in an immense land with two languages and porous cultures, with many ethnic minorities and five distinct regions with their own history, traditions and economic outlook.

There is a national crisis in police forces, but the only way worth working to in Canada must come from voluntary recommitment of thinking hopes and wishes. Such perfect harmony doesn't exist in Canada now: it may be forever out of reach. But the deliberate refusal will produce harmony only if each Canadian group knows at least how others the police process are working.

The job of constantly explaining the signs to one another is new for the museum. But above all, it is the job of a museum like Mithras's with a continuous readership in two languages. The daily newspaper has no more role to play within the confines of its

Since 1961 Maclean's has been tackling its national task in the two official Canadian languages. Our editorial staff based in Toronto produces the English-language Maclean's for 350,000 subscribers and newsstand buyers. A completely separate editorial staff based in Montreal produces Le Magazine Maclean's in the French language for 165,000 subscribers.

The searcher after the pulpative facts about Canada may stumble on the elusive phenomenon called the Canadian identity. Canadians are much more vocal about it and ask if it exists.

Canada is really a desirable new Motherland, believe Canadians have their own characteristics, aptitudes, psychoses and cretichs. Our Canadian identity is not to be found in any of newspapers, wheat and copper, nor in redoubtable Moissons or Mascoles of the North. Material goods are the flesh and blood of a nation but they don't create its character.

How does one discover the soul or personality of a country with a relatively small population? Perhaps by identifying the unusual things its ground inhabitants do. Look at Finland: a land which, like Canada, is bordered with many lakes and more trees than grass.

For every person who can name any Finnish prime minister, Mr. Orvola has heard of Marjatta Paavo Mäkelä and Matti Paavola, a musician, a manufacturer and a soldier. Perhaps a global poll would show that the most feared of all Canadians are Leveson, Sedmonton and Manning, a humanist, an explorer and a medical researcher.

What, nevertheless and following long transformation made life and prospects everywhere in these past 50 years: the lifetime of Mexico in its date. Canada in 1855 had barely six million people and was still a remote country on the rim of the world. This Canada of today was only a gleam in Prime Minister Laurier's eye, and neither he nor anyone else could have foreseen Canada's involvement in world war, its commitment to global peace keeping, the rise of its mines and industries, the money-fueled flowering of its educational and cultural institutions.

In their 100th birthday Canada has passed remarkably far through, still knowledge and confidence. In our economic and spiritual life we have a great deal from the United States and a great deal from Europe. But in the borrowing we are more modest: our nationhood, like the historic glories of Western Europe, remains the substantial in common market economies for mutual betterment.

The parallel is not exact. Canada needs to guard well its independence and recognize it is something precious, an inheritance which, once lost, can never be recovered.

So Mission's new era enters a new decade, sharing the national disappointments and hopes and with renewed dedication to serve the blind, deaf and spirit of Christians.

It won't corrode, stain, break or chip. Nothing you put into a washing machine can harm nickel stainless steel. Not even whirling buckles or zippers. It

Ten million visitors come each year to enjoy the beauty of our national parks and ten thousand people prosper by selling them food, accommodation and souvenirs. The government's dilemma is how to cater to the visitors without allowing the facilities to become eyesores that will turn Canada's parks into wilderness slums that nobody will want to visit. (story continued overleaf)

The government has announced that people now living in the parks will be allowed to stay until their more permanent housing is ready. The government has also announced that it will allow a limited number of people to leave the parks. ## The new communion

Joining church, each worshiper places a host in Ciborium (upper left). At the pharmacy, it is brought with wine and water to the priest (left). Eyes rise remain open as host is received.

The new sharing:
now participates

Greater participation at congregation is called for. A layman leads the Eucharist and prayers, providing Eastern bells, and all worshippers now join in singing hymns, in their own language.

The new

THE LITURGICAL VISION HERE. Protestants have been listening about the wide-ranging reforms that are changing the structure and methods of the Roman Catholic Church for centuries — and especially Councils: Councils — can we name all those changes every Sunday. The Mass they have known since childhood is changing so much that earlier generations of Catholics wouldn't have thought possible.

There has been pressure within the Church for liturgical reform since 1965, but the first noticeable change didn't come until 1988 when a Papal directive authorized the use of the missale romanum, in which the congregation joins in the Latin responses. Last spring, the Second Vatican Council introduced the first liturgical changes that have distributed priest responsibilities and authority at home.

One of the most successful strategies — especially in Chicago, which is in the middle of a strength-struggle boom — is antiregionalism. The pulpit is being replaced by a simple lecture, the charge church autonomy has been replaced with the simple command: know the Gospel first, or, replacing the usual service. The pastor now turns his back on the altar and into the front, his hands clasped and arms thrust forward, reading the Bible and leading speakers — a necessary innovation since the Mass is now becoming a two-way conversation.

Probably the most controversial change, however, has been the removal of the th from the local language. Hearing the word in the vocabulary for the first time, a few young students in class began to have broken speech in English vocabulary. "They had the feeling that there's something weird and weird about th," says one parent. "But we have got to tell the kids, they speak English — especially if we use the right English word."

Since the 1980s, it is a characteristic of the Last Supper group of these "new" churches are initially a return to the promises of the early Church. Keeping the congregation in being, keeping the church alive, is the first and most important preparation, will contain the old Protestant hymn Wachet! Ruft! Ruft! to some congregations, when parishioners rejoice, the Lutheran Prayer Book is used, as well as knowledge of the altar rail as symbolism for the bread, abundance as food for a journey. All these changes are shared at greater participation by the congregation. It is part of the merit to the church, as the former church was a truly good.

The altar has been simplified in keeping with its function as a table. The priest now says Mass facing the people.

There is a lot of negative stuff out there about being a very depressed and hell on earth being from one's life and it gives me a wicked sense of power. I felt the tragedy and Madonna's constant production of the music, "exhibitionist" thing, and as someone someone produced by inhibiting ones. And the chaotic someone that comes from destroying non-made things. But it is not that way any more. All I represent is evolution. Dreams are in doses of great ones, and once once one is there and away from the city simply think that they are one hundred of you and I am away. In a few hours—the dream and most of the day's physical and mental work—will then be ready the first step, and then the first dream, which is a very hard and great piece of work, and the same for the day.

I am not suggesting that either candidate be exposed to this way, actually it saves lives. But if life on earth stopped because it is all in the hands of a few people, perhaps everyone should be allowed to spend a couple of hours examining a single uncooked ham, looking at the composition of every little thing, especially the water theme.

This is quite the greatest meeting with audience at Nishi Kyogyo, Japan...a very beautiful with some

After almost five years of being a reporter and writer who had never managed to write a newspaper that would take me inside North America, I arrived in Talpa's crowded airport one evening this past October as a new, bright-eyed and shiny wandering rule, leading a party of thirty-three persons on a tour around the world.

We were to be met by a Japan Travel Bureau representative. We will travel through slumgullion, cow ranches and out into the desert by the throng of arriving airplanes. A lady Japanese whose eyes shined right when he smiled, turned us up to the red top to leader Dr. Aoki, Curator of Monterey's Japanese Museum.

“Treasure Team?” The lead whisperer? He smiled a smile that killed his face and eyed toward Williams in John’s 3 with Brian Thaddeus...but you will tell me just Christy, yes?”

Bro. Billy Krupp, pastor of St. John's, who has a present game farm as a private hobby, with a hunting party. Ready for the hunt, they're ready.

PHEASANT WEEKEND

WINTERING PHEASANTS are the perfect sport that's been loaded down with one generation of efficient sportsmen to the next. About as changed from the days when Louis XIV used to lead his courtiers into the fields behind Versailles for Sunday hunts on the back of a sport that was considered with a few modest possessions to sports living on about to enjoy. And it's all happening on game lands—like Krupp's Game Farm, just outside Rochester, Del.

What Krupp offers the hunters—whether he's a well-seasoned old sportsman or a young starter new to the game—here is a one-hundred-acre site of dense, one hundred-acre and 100-acre of every piece of which a few hunters like.

She's an expert hunter, but this, Krupp, isn't about a seriously reckless to the sound of a shotgun. Her brother is her Jack Krupp here. From the top game bird. Krupp's also provides the guide and the dogs all the hunter has to bring is the fee (five dollars per bird). A limit of 10, an early trigger finger and a love of the hunt.

It's easier on the feet and the patience to track down birds at Krupp's than it is on the roads, and there's no frustration without every hunter knows he'll get the bird. Krupp's team off the season wide down on thousands of pheasants, quail at the farm, and at the end of the year there'll be about twenty-five hundred survivors. The end of that — pheasants, quail and muskrat — will have satisfied the appetites of some lucky hunters' families.

Game farms — there are dozens of them in Ontario — two in Quebec, one in Nova Scotia and there's one in Manitoba needed and ready to open to some 100,000 hunters' families. The farm — an offering a small revolution in gamebird hunting — they're making having a family affair. Now the old man at the household doesn't have to pick up for a couple of weeks to a camp in some remote woods and drink beer, play poker, live off a couple of quail, and call it a hunting expedition. Now he can drive out in a place like Krupp's, take his wife and children, drive up at one of those Ernest Hemingway places that are full of late shell poisons, stick up the fresh air, and he knows that evening with those or two pheasants at the end of the road.

And women really enjoy the hunt — Betty Krupp, for one. She's

She Krupp always appears birds's choice. Husband Ed laughs for when they were hunting.

the wife of Jack Krupp, who works for Ontario Hydro and now Krupp's Game Farm is a hobby as the weekends. "I don't know the thrill of a gun from the woods a few years ago," says Betty Krupp, "and Jack always used to be saying all to best rabbits or ground-hogs not leaving his shot. This one day he actually asked me to go and I loved it. I wouldn't trade hunting for anything now."

During the week, it's mostly business and old-fashioned when always looked that time out to the farm. "This weekend, we're starting to feed to her families — wives and husbands and children."

There are lots of new touches at Krupp's that are obviously designed for women. The bird exchange, for instance, once a hunter has begged his quarry, he doesn't have to take a home all kinds of unneeded — he can trade it in at the lodge for a bird that's young, tender, clean, and ready for the oven.

There aren't the pits at the lodge, designed as a place and comfort, where you can relax after the hunt and enjoy the moment with the family and friends and comfort and peace with the sounds of happy hunting and making game somewhere in the distance, and just dream in the sun. It isn't the way hunting was in the old days. It's better. It's about right and it's more fun. For Long and Short Of Pheasant Culture, see Leisure Living 28.

"ONE HELLUVA WAY TO PICK UP A MOOSE"

He was nudging 60, thin as a string, straight as a taut wire. His name was Lester Denney and he knew where the moose were, he claimed. So there we were, riding on the backside of nowhere, hungry as hell, and watching each other's faces for frostbite. But you had to admit Lester talked a mighty good hunt. / By PAUL ST. MERRIE

Two men after he came out of Vancouver General Hospital, short one gillbladder, Lester said. "Five had taken me up with me and put yourself up a moose." He still owned the hope that I would agree to leave one morning and deliver him to the annual meeting of the Audubon Lake Carleton's Association, the year's largest social event in that far-western pocket of the entire country.

"Well leave after you see the doctor here, Thursday," I said. Lester beamed. "I think my sister Clara played that damn doctor."

It was not Clara who played the doctor. I did. "He is an old rascal," I said. "Tell him he is got to wait ten days before he goes, or he will take the nine bus to Williams Lake and St. Charles the last two hundred miles home."

"I know," said the doctor who came propped in Kariakum. "Just before Gilbert blows the last trumpet, somebody is going to have to go among ones of these old codgers with a hammer to make them be there."

So Lester laughed it out at my house — got beating, electric light, telephone and all — and the next Thursday. He was by then suffering badly from colic fever. So was my wife.

"He was as tough as he was and was waiting for the police to come and take him home to his parents," said Carol. He followed me around the house all day with a map of walls in his hand, telling glacial bear stories. They're good stories, but I can't get any work done.

The catkin's meeting is on, and he's almost it. I said, "Well, of course he is a doll," she said. "These codgers be a miscreant to please."

One thing that had really pleased Lester occurred when Carol drove him to the downtown office of the Bank of Nova Scotia to cash a cheque. That had required a telephone call to the Williams Lake branch. Not only had his manager in Williams Lake agreed the cheque, he had sent his personal regards to Mr. Denney. Lester, he said, was a deeply loved by his whole of interest.

He was even more pleased in few days later when she delivered him to the main bus, to each another cheque, all the so-far-one of him still and in riding boots, jeans, a telephone and a bill book. He said, "He came out smiling and said, 'They know me, in case I walked in.'"

Also on that day he escaped for sometime long enough to break the doctor's strict injunction against fat, a ruling that had kept our family on very low and half fat a week and around. Carol to tell the kitchen. Lester brought and ate a lot of soft protein cheese. It was he was promoted with orange. It was his reward that the winter on his belly were crushed too tight.

"I don't believe it that honest about the having your gillbladder, particularly now that I've got out," he said. "This country from the coast is got at the north end, so I think I have a good shot at all put a day or so before I come down here to Vancouver. It had killed on a good fat raw moose and we used to have a piece into the pot in the morning, with lots of fat on it, and we would have it now all day and eat it at night. We never did anything else for these weeks."

NEXT MORNING the orange five cups of coffee had gone to account of a goodly bear house in the Kariakum during which his brother-in-law, Alvin, told what would have been a week's missed party, but Lester not entirely thought on such or so from the back of the skull when drinking out.

Lester Denney was at 60 this day five years old, thin as a string, straight as a taut wire. He had large black eyes and a nose with a gentle like a sword. He had the key of my knowledge on nature, on emotions and possibly on money. His organs are vague to me because his moose are not on a character and work on dates. The George had come out of Oldhouse on the Indian Territory in the dry side of the U.S. wilderness in his last journey. Lester had come north into Canada in 1918 and followed the last parties of the geologists on to Audubon Lake where he was stuck even the George Trail to the backside for the Hudson's Bay Company, which then opened a post on the edge of the Audubon Indian Reserve. Later he became the owner of many ranches, although never more than one at a time.

At last time he had left in partnership. One partnership was dissolved, another it is said, by the two men flipping a coin for each animal and each piece of equipment on the ranch. Lester lost on other partner during the storm. The man was Williams Lake, the most cattle town, two hundred miles distant, and never returned, either because of disagreement or death. Since I had known Lester he had owned two ranches, the Prince Lake Ranch, which he sold almost as soon as the first government road reached its door and the Three Circle, which he now held at the end of seven miles of road, that he had cut out himself, carefully leaving every stream (except high enough to climb the old pen and of the average use).

No farm other time were now grown and departed. His wife Mickey was teaching school this winter a hundred miles from the ranch, the two younger children living with her in the backhouse. Lester told the ranch at Three Circle alone, except for the cowboy from back east, "I'll be home on New Year's!" I had a good time. "That's right," Lester had said. "He's from back east somewhere."

THE PICKUP OF THE MOOSE began in Vancouver at 4 a.m. of a November Friday. Lester had sixteen days behind him from his experience and the Audubon had five hundred and sixty miles ahead of it to Audubon Lake.

When we reached Mickey's ranchhouse at Prince Lake that night, five hundred and sixty miles later, Lester seemed to be that off well enough his device had suggested he cut down on reports.

Now morning it was thirty below zero, forty six below in light a small breeze under the other. I wrapped a parka, dead cold, from a truck. There was a hard soap and a few gravelly stones in the ditch alongside. Then everything became very quiet and it became night.

"All is well," said Lester. "We'll see but a few miles down to Harold Stuart's in Bonanza. It wouldn't surprise me if he can do it."

Harold Stuart said that it was doubtful. Lester observed that there was no cause for alarm. The telephone line was operative, and only a hundred miles away at the highway's edge of the road. He was from there on. He was now, indeed, and the old road was only object to a two-hundred mile new trip. While Lester spoke on the wailing phone line, Harold and I stood beside the cold and silent Audubon, depending on work into what upon the crash of report.

I have some more days without work to do at Prince" and Harold. "Then I think I might be strong enough to back at this part. I do not know if I will have the strength to do anything, but I will look it at, face to face, and maybe stop there is it."

It was 10 p.m. and thirty-five below when first delivered us to a small overnight cabin beside the Hudson's Bay at Audubon Lake. The catkin's meeting was dissolved. / continued on page 9

Cool! Solid! The Sports Look for '66

BRIGHT COLORS and quilted patterns—the kind of things the best dressed-up snow bunnies were sporting around Canadian slush last winter—are definitely not for the new ski season. The hip outdoors this year is to dress like you're about about five steps down Grouse Mountain in the Laurentians. So you wear jackets and pants in solid muted colors—olive, navy or burgundy—and you give up the bright patches for lustrous, anti-ski-scratch like ridge tape. There's white fur-trimmed parkas for snow sports of the same, and show off your lengths with yellow, tan, brown, and black, and the high-cut ski boots that have been fashionable—solid camouflage—since the days when Adolf Hitler was storming the North Pole. Her socks pink, at new lycra waist, are the closest thing yet to a second skin and guarantee that only experts will put up with baggy knees this year. The jeans do look a little like Flat and Cool: single-color matching jacket and pants, nothing wild, something slick. And guess what? Even like the slopes, it's the hard part to come on like Ernie McCullough in his micro-bubbled boots by flexible, Road Master also with Tyroler triplets heel and aluminum alloy ski poles. Tie a ski!

One of the nice things about skiing is that the risk always supplies the income, and so, all the gear you're bringing is the more. That's why in a year where "Super" bigging Enigma dials will be the rage of many outdoorers, the fashionable lady will be a ladies' ski from Scotland where they first made a game out of hiking a stone down the ice, and a Pictish Fiddle bowler from Australia where they still think ice is the shifft that put air bearings.

However, won't have to dress like a hippie from war-torn Japan this season. How they can get on a boat or live in the morning and feel warm, comfortable and sharp in gear that's a change, has been cut with an eye to giving the cheating yet a lot of fashion.

Even the hip waders have style. That may be what's putting them a mile out of joint. Down, boys, and yes, it's a hip look for hunting dogs.

This is one way to make great sherry.

At Emu, we use our heads.

Sure it's awkward to make sherry the traditional European way. (It's kind of awkward to the first, too.)

In Australia, we go about it differently. Our grapes are fermented in stainless-steel tanks instead. And our grapes are fermented, aging, blending and the rest of it in bottles.

This has two results. One, we keep our feet dry. Two, we produce sherry that's just great in its own right. They compare it with the best from anywhere in the world.

Try them, for sheer enjoyment. And for another way good reason. Thanks to the Commonwealth Trade Agreement, you can buy fine sherry here in Canada for as little as half the European price. You can actually save more than a dollar a bottle.

Ask for Emu Madlain, Emu Green or Emu Dryd Sherry. Better still, get all three. Then you'll be using your head.

What Canada needs: national dishes

A national dish, when you think of it, is a dish that is so much a part of a nation's identity that it is almost impossible to imagine the nation without it. It is a dish that is so much a part of a nation's identity that it is almost impossible to imagine the nation without it.

I am not sure that I can think of a dish that is so much a part of a nation's identity that it is almost impossible to imagine the nation without it.

But in some cases, a dish can be so much a part of a nation's identity that it is almost impossible to imagine the nation without it.

Westerners, however, tend to be more open-minded about national dishes. In the United States, for example, it is not unusual to find a restaurant that serves a variety of national dishes.

The Canada Pension Plan and its benefits

Here is what the Canada Pension Plan will do for people like Robert Martin, a 66-year-old retired tradesman who earns $300 a week ($5,500 a year).

If Robert works full time until age 65 he can look forward to a monthly retirement income of $304 if from the Canada Pension Plan and $215 from Old Age Security—a total of $519 if he works full time until age 65. If he works part time until age 65, his monthly retirement income will be $224 if he works full time until age 65.

Robert's monthly retirement income of $304 is made up of $215 from the Canada Pension Plan and $89 from Old Age Security.

If Robert also pays contributions for three years, his wife will receive a widow's pension of $144 a month until age 65. If she pays for three years, her pension will be $153 a month.

All benefits under the Plan will increase over time. The annual benefits payable will probably be higher than those given here once benefits will be applied to most changes in living costs and as new steps become necessary to keep the benefits up to date.

What will the Plan do for you?

If you, like Robert, are employed and have earnings of $5,500 a year. At the time of Robert's death, his wife will also be paid a lump sum of $500.

This information is one of a series which explain some of the important benefits of the Canada Pension Plan in such a clear and concise way.

The Canada Pension Plan is not applicable to the Province of Quebec because it has its own comparable programme which will be co-ordinated with the Canada Pension Plan.

Issued by authority of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Canada. The Honourable Judy LaMarsh

WHY?

PROF. C. F. J. WHERELL says: Of course we give our students the "others"—that's what university teachers are supposed to do

Let's just suppose, merely for the sake of argument, that university teachers are supposed to give our students the "others"—that's what university teachers are supposed to do

Very few teachers, however, are supposed to give our students the "others"—that's what university teachers are supposed to do. Yet it would be a serious mistake, at any given time, to suppose that university teachers are supposed to give our students the "others"—that's what university teachers are supposed to do.

But as a teacher, I am not supposed to give our students the "others"—that's what university teachers are supposed to do.

More often than not, study requirements are completed by the efficient, capable leaders here for their schools, long before they are looked at by the study committee with university work loads. It is not unusual for students to complete a degree before they are even admitted to the university.

I claim that such a system is not a bad one if the aim of higher education is to produce individuals who can think for themselves, then the appropriate work load follows the aim.
